The following is based upon a true story which I heard on the radio. It began some years ago, there was a couple who were well known as a couple devoted to each other and they were really happy.

But one day, his wife got into a car accident and had injuries that made her blind. After she lost her sight in the accident, her disability made her life more and more impossible and she felt frustrated.

Despite her handicap, she was able to hold down a job after her accident. So, her husband had to do everything for her everyday serving her as a carer. He was full of devotion for his wife.

Time flies, he picks her up at her work place just like everyday.

He said on a bus.

"Sorry, I can't pick you up everyday anymore. My office has moved quite far away from here."

It was a bitter disappointment to her, but she concealed her true feelings and said it was fine. From the next day, she had to go by herself. Although it wasn't so easy for her, she became used to it soon.

Time flew some more, when she got on a bus one day,

"You must be really happy." said the driver.

"Oh, yes.. well.. thanks," replied the woman to the unexpected words of the driver. When she was about to pass him and find a seat, he again said.

"You must be happy because your husband is always with you when you get on the bus, sits down next to you till you get off and waves his hands to your back with smiles."

He was always with her every step of the way. —"END"
